

Archaeology of sharing practices

Since the 1990's the Laboratory of Environmental Archaeology and History of the University of Genova started to define and build an historical approach to the study of environmental resources. Following the perspectives of English historical ecology and through interdisciplinary research, the Laboratory identified a microanalytical approach, which opened a dialogue between disciplines, bringing together field and documentary sources that, in their interaction, build the bed-rock of its research practices.

Over the course of the current research, we have identified some questions particularly suitable for a theoretical and methodological discussion: the abandonment processes, the problem of continuities and discontinuities, the role of negotiation on access rights to resources in the social construction of space.

Starting from the idea that "exchange is what creates value" (A.Appadurai), this workshop aims at providing an opportunity to discuss issues related to archaeological interpretation, comparing research from different chronological and disciplinary perspectives.

The workshop is organized within the framework of the ANTIGONE and the KORE projects, which address the relationship between changes in practices to manage and activate environmental resources and population dynamics, considering the timespan between 17th and 21st c.
